PRINCE KUNG.

Checked Career of the New Chinese Commander in Chief.

Prince Kung, who has been appointed commander in chief of the Chinese armies, is one of the oldest, but not the ablest, Manchurian politicians in the imperial court at Peking. He is a younger brother of the emperor, Hien Fung, and is about seventy-two years of age. It is said that the years have told upon him, and he is but a shadow of his former self, both physically and intellectually. On account of the high position due to his relationship to the crown, he has been brought more into prominence than his abilities at any time warranted. His official status made him the second most important person in the imperial clan, his only superior being the emperor himself. Through his relationship he takes the name of Kung Tsin-Wang, in which Kung means prince, and Tsin-Wang implies the highest branch of kinship. As translated into English, "Prince Kung" is a term which is liable to produce an erroneous impression. Kung is not the name of either a person or a place, but of a title. It is merely a general description or epithet which might apply to many individuals.

The person bearing this title receives an annual salary from the imperial treasury of fifteen thousand dollars, a retinue of three hundred and sixty servants, one for every day of the Chinese year, and clothing, palace and food for the support of himself, his family and all his subordinates. In the blue book of China his allowance from year to year has never fallen below seventy-five thousand dollars, and in the times of his greatest prosperity it has exceeded one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. In addition to this handsome revenue he is entitled to salary and fees in the various positions which he may hold from time to time.

Kung's career has been a very checked one. In his best years he has held as many as fifteen offices, whose net return was annually over three hundred thousand dollars, and on the other hand, in seasons of retirement or of disgrace, all of his positions have been taken away from him. Despite his ups and downs he is a very rich man and wields a tremendous power in the empire.

Upon the death of the old emperor in 1890, Kung was appointed joint regent with the two dowager empresses, his sisters-in-law, and there held sway for twelve years. His administration was marked by many reforms, by appreciation and adoption of European methods and by the recognition and promotion of the leaders of the liberal or progressive party, among whom were Li Hung Chang and others of lesser note. During this period the great Taiping rebellion occurred, and was finally suppressed through the assistance of the great powers and a troop of foreign mercenaries; the Mohammedan insurrection which at one time threatened the western half of the empire was utterly crushed; the uprising in the northwest was defeated and several small wars with Tartar tribes in Mongolia and Manchuria were brought to a successful termination. On one occasion he admitted to Lord Elgin that he understood but little of modern warfare and relied entirely upon those familiar with its principles and practices. He also opened up diplomatic intercourse with foreign nations and was instrumental in establishing many of the present treaty ports. He was a great friend of "Chinese" Gordon, although the latter regarded him as thoroughly unscrupulous and treacherous.

WRITING ONE'S FIRST NOVEL.

The Delight and Dread of the Ordeal to the Seeker of Literary Fame.

Sooner or later, somehow, anyhow, I was bound I was to write a novel, writes Robert Louis Stevenson in McClure's. It seems vain to ask why. Men are born with various manias; from my earliest childhood it was mine to make a plaything of imaginary series of events, as soon as I was able to write I became a good friend to the paper makers. * * * The succession of defeats lasted unbroken till I was thirty-one. By that time I had written little books and little essays and short stories, and had got patted on the back and paid for them, though not enough to live upon. I had quite a reputation. I was the successful man. I passed my days in toil, the futility of which would sometimes make my cheek to burn—that I should spend a man's energy upon this business and yet could not earn a livelihood, and still there shone ahead of me an unattained ideal. Although I had attempted the thing with vigor not less than ten to twelve times, I had not yet written a novel. All my pretty ones—had gone for a little and then stopped inexorably, like a schoolboy's watch. I might be compared to a cricketer of many years' standing who should never have made a run. Anybody can write a short story—a bad one, I mean—who has industry and paper and time enough; but not everyone may hope to write even a bad novel. It is the length that kills. The accepted novelist may take up his novel and put it down, spend days upon it in vain, and write not any more than he makes haste to blot. Not so the beginner. Humane nature has certain rights; instinct—the instinct of self-preservation—prohibits that any man (cheered and supported by the consciousness of no previous victory) should endure the miseries of unsuccessful literary toil beyond a period to be measured in weeks. There must be something for hope to feed upon. The beginner must have a slant of wind, a lucky vein must be running, he must be in one of those hours when the words come and the phrases balance themselves—even to begin. And having begun, what a dread looking forward is that until the book shall be accomplished! For so long a time the slant is to continue unchanged, the vein to keep running; for so long a time you must hold at command the same quality of style; for so long a time your puppets are to be always vital, always consistent, always vigorous. I remember I used to look, in those days, upon every three-volume novel with a sort of veneration, as a feat not possibly, of literature, but at least of physical and moral endurance and the courage of Ajax.

STEVENSON ON THE RESULT.

Believes That the Financial Depression and Fooling With the Tariff Did It.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., November 9.—Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, vice-president, spent yesterday quietly in the seclusion of the home of his brother John, meditating upon the political events of yesterday and preparing to attend the wedding of a nephew, which took place last night. It was a dreary day, with leaden skies and a cold drizzling rain. Mr. Stevenson, when asked to state his opinion as to the causes leading up to the democratic defeat yesterday, said: "My opinion can be briefly stated. The result is due in part to the financial depression which came upon the country soon after the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland. While the democrats were in no way responsible for this, they were made the scapegoats. It was also in part due to the delay of congress in passing the tariff bill. Had the bill become a law ninety days earlier than it did, it is quite probable that the business conditions of the country would have so adjusted themselves that the political result would have been different."

Mr. Stevenson will depart from Bloomington this week for Asheville, N. C., where he will join his family, who are sojourning there. He will remain in the south three weeks, going thence to Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Mr. W. H.
